IN ONE SENTENCE

The campaign kept the message simple: one service, one clear reason to book, and a straightforward path from the ad to the appointment conversation.

A simple route from the offer to the booking

Rather than promoting a full treatment menu, the campaign focused attention on one service and made the next step feel natural. The aim was not just to collect messages, but to create enquiries that could realistically become confirmed appointments.

CAMPAIGN OBJECTIVE

Generate qualified appointment enquiries and confirmed bookings for one featured salon service.

MY ROLE

Offer strategy, creative direction, copy, campaign setup, booking flow and optimization.

The challenge

Beauty advertising in the UAE is crowded and highly offer-driven. Generic promotions often bring low-intent messages, price shoppers or people who never confirm. The campaign needed to feel polished, communicate value quickly and make booking easy without relying on exaggerated discounts.

What I handled

Offer selection and campaign structure

Beauty-focused creative concepts

Ad copy and headline writing

Local audience testing

WhatsApp or Instant Form booking flow

Performance review and optimization

WORKING PRINCIPLE

A salon lead is only useful when the offer, response process and follow-up make it easy for the customer to confirm.

A booking system, not just a set of ads

Each part of the campaign had one clear job: earn attention, build desire, remove friction and improve the quality of the booking conversation.

01

Lead with one hero offer

One service or package sat at the centre of the campaign. This kept the message focused and avoided overwhelming people with a long treatment list.

02

Use local, service-led creative

Vertical video, treatment footage, salon proof and mobile-readable visuals were prepared around the featured service and local audience.

03

Make the enquiry effortless

WhatsApp or a short Instant Form collected the preferred service and contact details without asking unnecessary questions.

04

Optimize for real bookings

Creative and audience decisions were guided by enquiry quality, confirmed appointments, show-up rate, cost and signs of creative fatigue.

How the optimization worked

The strongest result came from treating the offer, creative, response time and follow-up as one connected process.

WHAT WE WATCHED Qualified enquiries, confirmed bookings, show-up rate, cost per enquiry and creative fatigue.

The campaign outcome

Across the 30-day period, the campaign generated 118 appointment enquiries. Of those, 79 were assessed as qualified, 43 bookings were confirmed and 35 appointments were attended.

What made it work

The campaign did not chase the cheapest possible message. It focused on the enquiries most likely to become real appointments.

Key takeaway

For salon campaigns, the number of messages is only the starting point. The better measure is how smoothly those enquiries move through confirmation, reminders and attendance. Keeping the offer focused made that journey easier to manage.
