IN ONE SENTENCE

The campaign reduced the message to what mattered most: a clear benefit, a trustworthy presentation and an uncomplicated next step.

A technical service presented in plain language

Insurance is rarely an impulse decision, and most people do not want to read a long explanation inside an ad. The campaign needed to communicate enough value to earn attention while keeping the enquiry process simple and credible.

CAMPAIGN OBJECTIVE

Generate quote and information requests through Meta lead ads.

MY ROLE

Campaign strategy, creative direction, copy, setup, form build and cost-per-lead optimization.

The challenge

Insurance advertising can easily become too technical or too vague. Long explanations lose attention, while aggressive promises can reduce trust. The campaign had to create clarity without oversimplifying the service or overwhelming the user.

What I handled

Campaign strategy and setup

Trust-focused creative design

Copy and headline development

Audience structure and testing

Instant Form setup

Cost-per-lead optimization

WORKING PRINCIPLE

People do not need every policy detail in the ad. They need enough clarity and confidence to take the next step.

A clearer path from interest to enquiry

The campaign removed unnecessary complexity at each stage so prospects could understand the offer, trust the presentation and submit their details without friction.

01

Simplify the offer

The message focused on the practical benefit and the next step, avoiding heavy industry language and long policy explanations.

02

Build trust visually

The creative direction was clean and professional so the service felt credible rather than overly promotional.

03

Reduce form friction

The lead form asked for the information needed for follow-up without turning the enquiry into a lengthy application.

04

Improve efficiency over time

Creative and audience combinations were compared so weaker performance could be reduced and stronger variations could remain active.

How the optimization worked

The optimization process stayed focused on lead volume, cost per lead and the performance of each individual ad.

WHAT WE WATCHED Lead volume, cost per lead, form completion and ad-level performance.

The campaign result

The campaign produced 112 platform-reported insurance leads at an average cost of AED 4.08 per lead, creating a consistent flow of quote and information requests.

What made it work

For insurance, clarity and credibility mattered more than heavy sales language. A simple offer made the next step feel manageable.

Key takeaway

The strongest part of the campaign was not a complicated funnel. It was the discipline to remove unnecessary wording, keep the design trustworthy and ask only for the information required to begin the conversation.
